EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN NURSING

Aarushi Aggarwal

The experience of the COVID-19 pandemic over the last year has shone light on the importance of global healthcare systems and healthcare professionals. Doctors and nurses have been at the forefront of this evolving crisis-in caring for patients, driving research into understanding the virus and its risks, and developing solutions to overcome future threats. For all the progress made since March 2020 in dealing with the pandemic, a large degree of credit can be attributed to the community of healthcare professionals, both doctors and nurses alike.

The nursing staff are often the primary caregivers in hospitals, healthcare centers, nursing homes for the elderly, and at-home medical setups. They are also, often, the first healthcare professionals that patients interact with at these healthcare centers, including emergency services. This makes nurses indispensable in healthcare provision. As the world charts its future out of the pandemic, close attention must be paid to creating a robust global network of nursing staff through appropriate employment opportunities and community enablers. This task becomes yet more important as the world prepares to battle oncoming healthcare challenges that have created the need for more professionals in this space.

First, in countries across the world—from Japan and China in Asia to Italy, Portugal, Finland, Greece and Germany in Europe, to the United States in the Americas, the need for well trained and qualified nurses is growing. This is driven not only by the challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic but also by the aging population poses to a national economy, it is projected that the risks that an overwhelmingly ageing population above the age of 65 years poses to a national economy will increase. In India, for instance, the population aged 65 years or above is projected to increase from 2.26 million in 1990. Coronary heart disease prevalence rates in India are rising to stop this damage to environment. May be for this one reason we have taken the environment for granted and the result is there for all of us to see. There is pollution, water sources are depleting, we find lesser greenery around us and extinction of many creatures has already taken place. This damage to environment has created many problems. Natural resources are diminishing fast and our surrounding is becoming less livable. World over voices are rising to stop this damage to environment, enrich it with plantation and biodiversity and work towards sustainability for the larger good of human beings and millions of other species inhabiting this planet. If you share this concern, the academic discipline of environmental and sustainability studies may be the one made for you.

Environmental Studies is not just one subject. It is an interdisciplinary course comprising inputs from Biology, Chemistry, Physics, Ecology, Earth Science and few other subjects. As the name suggests, the course focuses upon the environment as well as events and processes taking place in the environment and on the Earth. The purpose of environmental education

The purpose of environmental education is to make students aware of the basics of environment, scientific perspectives of environment and major issues confronting our environment, social perspectives of environment, issues in global environmentalism, drivers of ecological changes and how these affect us, role of wildlife, environmental risk assessment, causes of environmental pollution and mitigation strategies, planning for environmental, supply and demand equation of natural resources, laws relating to environment, environmental ethics and philosophy etc.

Environmental education helps people to explore the sustainable way of living and how to use natural resources effectively without harming the environment. Educational opportunities environment is generally discussed as a chapter in text books. The idea is to make students aware of the issues. Formal education of environment mental science can be undertaken at undergraduate level. Students may either go for B.Sc. degree (three years) in Environmental Science or for a B.Tech degree (four years) in Environmental Engineering. To seek admission to any of the above courses, students should have taken science subjects (Physics, Chemistry, Biology) at their 10+2 level. At postgraduate level, you may pursue any of the following courses in environmental studies, subject to eligibility: M.Sc. in Environmental Science M.Tech. in Environmental Engineering MBA in Environmental Management All the above courses have a duration of two years. What is covered in Environmental Studies Environmental Studies deals with various issues of resource use, pollution, global warming, industry which is needed for sustainable development. CSIR-National Metallurgical Laboratory (NML), a constituent Laboratory of the Council of Scientific & Industrial Research (CSIR) is a R&D organization dedicated to metallurgical and materials engineering research. Its domain of operations encompasses raw materials processing, new strategies for metal extraction, metallurgical wastes and lean resources utilization, energy, sustainability and environmental issues of metallurgical processing, innovation and interventions for rural and artisanal materials technology, advanced alloys and materials development, metal forming and formability, corrosion and surface engineering, materials mechanics, materials and process modelling, microstructural engineering, non-destructive evaluation, structural integrity assessment etc. With its modern and extensive infrastructure and the large spectrum of expertise of its Scientific and Technical manpower, CSIR-NML is primarily engaged in industrially significant research pursuits and demonstration of high quality science.

Up to the level of HSC, the issue of

To augment and strengthen its research activities in the areas of advanced alloys development, metal forming and formability, materials mechanics, microstructural engineering, non-destructive evaluation, structural integrity assessment etc. With its modern and extensive infrastructure and the large spectrum of expertise of its Scientific and Technical manpower, CSIR-NML is primarily engaged in industrially significant research pursuits and demonstration of high quality science.

Online Applications from bonafide Indian nationals are solicited for the following Scientific positions for the above requirements. Online Applications must be made Postcode-wise. Separate Online Applications must be made for each Post code.

What is Mucormycosis or 'Black Fungus disease' and why is it affecting COVID-19 patients?

Mucormycosis has recently been reported in large numbers among COVID-19 patients in India. Also known as the ‘black fungus’ disease in common parlance, the fungal disease is becoming increasing worrying and can be life-threatening. The Ministry of Health and Family Welfare (MoHW) has urged the States and Union Territories to make mucormycosis a notifiable disease under the Epidemic Diseases Act, 1897. The MoHW has asked the States and UTs to make it mandatory for all government and private health facilities and medical colleges to report all suspected and confirmed cases to the respective health departments through the district-level chief medical officers and subsequently, to the Integrated Disease Surveillance Programme (IDSP).

What is mucormycosis?

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) defines mucormycosis as a serious and often fatal fungal infection caused by a group of moulds called ‘mucoraceae’. These fungi live all around in the environment, particularly in soil and in decaying organic matter, such as leaves, compost piles, or rotten wood. The infection, as per the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR), mainly affects people who are on medication for other health problems (diabetics or immunosuppressed individuals) that reduces their ability to fight environmental pathogens. Sinuses or lungs of such individuals get affected after fungal spores are inhaled from the air. Mucormycosis can also develop on the skin after the fungus enters the skin through a cut, scrape, or burn.

Are there any different types of mucormycosis?

According to CDC, mucormycosis has different types. Rhino Orbital Cerebral Mucormycosis and Pulmonary mucormycosis are the two forms of mucormycosis being reported among the COVID-19 patients. The former occurs when fungal spores are inhaled and turn into cancerous infection in nose, orbit of the eye(s)/eyelid, oral cavity, and can even spread to the brain. The latter occurs when the fungal spores reach the respiratory system and affect the lungs.

What are the symptoms?

According to the ICMR, symptoms include pain and redness around eyes and/or nose, fever, headache, cough, shortness of breath, bloody vomits, and altered mental status. Pain in sinuses, bleeding nose, chest pain, and swelling on face may also be counted as mucormycosis. However, one must not miss warning signs and symptoms and should not hesitate to seek immediate medical care, even if limited (KOH staining & microscopic examination). For detecting fungal etiology.

Why has it become a matter of concern for COVID-19 patients?

Mucormycosis is not a new disease. Such infections were reported even before the pandemic. Its incidence has increased very rapidly. Now, due to COVID-19, this rare but fatal fungal infection is being reported especially in numbers of patients with Coronavirus Disease Associated Mucormycosis (CAM) is being seen in patients who are either receiving antifungal treatment for COVID-19. This is because medicines used in treating COVID-19 bring down the count of lymphocytes which have a medical condition called ‘lymphopenia’, which makes COVID-19 patients much more susceptible to the fungal infection. In addition, COVID-19 patients undergoing oxygen therapy in which humidifier is being used, are prone to fungal infection if inhaled air in the humidifier is not cleansed and rectified regularly.

How can mucormycosis be prevented?

Mucormycosis is a rare disease which mostly affects people who have a weak immune system due to steroids, uncontrolled diabetes mellitus, co-morbidities (post- transplant/malignancy), have undergone voriconazole therapy, or had a prolonged ICU stay. ICMR suggests use of masks whilePenis the movement of duty work sites, wearing shoes, long trousers, long sleeve shirts and gloves while handling soil (gardening), moss or manure, and maintaining personal hygiene including thorough scrub bath.

Other crucial directions include controlling hyperglycemia (high blood sugar), monitoring blood glucose level post meals, dampening soil in garden, using steroid judiciously (correct timing, correct dose and duration), using clean, sterile water for irrigation, wearing oxygen therapy, and using antibiotics/antifungals judiciously.

Employment News 5 - 11 June 2021

Mucormycosis infection generally starts in the nose & may progress to the eye and the brain (blackish/bloody), local pain on the cheek bone
One sided facial pain, numbness or swelling
Black discoloration of nose, palate
Toothache, loosening of teeth, jaw involvement
Blurred or double vision with pain; fever, skin lesion; thrombosis & nescar (eschar)
Chest pain, pleural effusion, haemoptysis, worsening of respiratory symptoms

What are the causes?

According to ICMR, not all cases with blocked nose as cases of bacterial sinusitis, particularly in the context of immunosuppression and/or COVID-19 patients on immunomodulators, should not be counted as mucormycosis. However, one must not miss warning signs and symptoms and should not hesitate to seek immediate medical care, even if limited (KOH staining

Explain how to detect mucormycosis.

According to ICMR, not all cases with blocked nose as cases of bacterial sinusitis, particularly in the context of immunosuppression and/or COVID-19 patients on immunomodulators, should not be counted as mucormycosis. However, one must not miss warning signs and symptoms and should not hesitate to seek immediate medical care, even if limited (KOH staining & microscopic examination).

It is important to note that mucormycosis is not a new disease. How can mucormycosis be treated?

Mucormycosis is a serious and often fatal disease that needs to be treated with prescription antifungal medicine, usually Amphotericin-B. MoHW has urged the States and UTs to incentivise pharmaceutical companies and Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) is making proactive efforts for significantly ramping up domestic production of Amphotericin-B drug. The Union Government has also made effective efforts in supplementing the domestic production through securing supply from global manufacturers.

There are five existing manufacturers of Amphotericin-B in the country, namely Bharat Serums & Vaccines Ltd, BDR Pharmaceuticals Ltd, Sun Pharma Ltd, Anjali Life Care Innovations, and one importer Mylan Labs. Five more manufacturers have been given the license to produce the antifungal drug this January. These are NATCO Pharmaceuticals (Hyderabad), Alemic Pharmaceuticals (Vadodara), Gulfa Biosciences Ltd (Gujarat), Emcure Pharmaceuticals (Pune), and Lyka (Gujarat). Cumulatively, these companies will start producing 1.11 million vials of Amphotericin-B per month from July 2021. The Government is trying to proactively facilitate these five manufacturers to prepare and be prepared for any shortfall, which can be used in treatment of mucormycosis.

In some cases, treatment may involve surgically removing all dead tissue. Only recently, a 90-year-old COVID-19 survivor in Mumbai had her nose and an eye surgically removed. (Compiled by Annessha Banerjee & Anuja Bhardwaj)

The deep fact, accentuated by the anguish the pandemic has caused, has made the need for more nursing staff very apparent. In the next phase of this pandemic, new nurses can take on a leading role in extending care.

A greater number of nurses in areas with high number of cases can also ensure proper care to patients less at risk so that any deterioration in health can be addressed quickly and centrally to vaccination programmes; in most places the jab is in fact administered by a nurse. Vaccination programmes are not complete if diarrhoea or vomiting when coronavirus does not cease to threaten the world. This opens more doors to nurses to join the global workforce and ease the healthcare burden.

India sends a large number of nurses every year to the Gulf countries, Europe and other English-speaking nations. Supporting them is a vast network of nursing institutions where candidates can pursue a diploma, graduate or postgraduate course in nursing or train in midwifery. The length of a diploma programme is two years while a bachelor’s degree in nursing takes four years to complete (three years in distance learning). Nurses may also further specialise in different fields like critical care, operation theatre nursing and education, among others. The Ministry of Health and Family Welfare hopes 22,000 new nurses will enter the profession annually. Presently, India lacks 1 lakh auxiliary nurse midwives and 4 lakh general nurse midwives. Given India’s focus on strengthening its healthcare systems, for the present the need is obvious, and this gap will be filled sooner rather than later. As the global community prepares for a hopeful pandemic-less future of robust health and wellness, the nursing profession looks particularly bright.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN NURSING

been estimated over the past several decades and have ranged from 1.6 per cent to 7.4 per cent in rural populations and from 1-13.2 per cent in urban populations. This makes India among the worst afflicted countries in the world. This opens more doors for employment especially since the weaker. This ought to be an urgent need to address rapidly. However, one must not miss warning signs and symptoms and should not hesitate to seek immediate medical care, even if limited (KOH staining & microscopic examination).

The pandemic has also created an opportunity for governments across the world—at the centre and local levels—to expand their healthcare outreach and create systems that support urgent response. In order to prepare for the possibility of another virus like Covid-19 causing SARS-CoV-2 devastating the global economy, governments must rapidly expand their healthcare infrastructures and extend them to rural areas and remote communities where healthcare services may be considerably weaker. This ought to be an urgent need to address rapidly. Since the possibility of a consistently mutating SARS-CoV-2 has not been eliminated yet. If the virus takes on yet another virulent form, nurses would be required on the frontlines to help combat its fallout.

At present, the nursing staff deployed to care nursing, neuro care, operation care, midwifery. Syrian President Bashar al-Assad has been re-elected for the fourth consecutive term. Parliamentary Speaker Hammouda Sabbagh announced the results at a press conference, saying that Assad had won 95.1% of the votes with a 78% voter turnout. Assad has been the President of the West Asian country since 2000. Syria's Opposition has called the vote a farce, while the US and the European countries said the elections were not free or fair. The elections were held in government-controlled areas of the country and in some Syrian embassies overseas.

French President recognises French responsibility in Rwanda Genocide
French President Emmanuel Macron, in a visit to Rwanda, has said that France recognised its "responsibility" in the 1994 Rwandan genocide. His comments came during a solemn speech at the Kigali Genocide Memorial on May 27, 2021, where 2,500,000 victims of the mass killings are buried. Macron said France had a duty to admit the "suffering it inflicted on the Rwandan people by too long ignoring the examination of the truth". He added that only those who had survived the horrors "can maybe forgive". Macron, however, added that France was not an accomplice to the genocide. The 1994 genocide killed around eight lakh people, mostly Tutsi Rwandans and moderate Hutus. Rwanda has repeatedly accused France of being complicit in the genocide.
