CAREER IN LIBRARY & INFORMATION SCIENCE

Vijay Prakash Srivaslava

Knowledge is power. Libraries can be called repositories of knowledge. The shape of economies keeps changing and economies are characterised in many ways. Today's economy is called knowledge economy. According to the World Bank, a knowledge economy is the economy that creates, disseminates, and uses knowledge to enhance its growth and development. International Centre for Technical and Vocational Education and Training defines knowledge economy to be the one that is driven by knowledge and ideas rather than by material resources. The human mind is a creator as well as repository of knowledge. In many cases this knowledge is made available to others in forms of speeches, writings, etc. Ancient knowledge and wisdom can be found in writings of Mahanvi Vyas, Khalil Gibran and many more. In many cases these writings are available in the form of books and manuscripts, etc. In contemporary world where technology is ruling the roost, knowledge is also shared through videos, blogs and podcasts. Institutions also create their own repository of knowledge meant for use by their people. Library is a place where you find collection of books, magazines and various other sources of knowledge. As students, we might be making use of these libraries on a regular basis. The fee students pay to their institute, also includes a library fee. Particularly in higher studies and research, libraries become highly significant support, as only limited number of books can be bought by an individual. As a student, one may find large number of books on a particular subject. We use libraries to add to our knowledge and collect references. We may wonder what it would be like to work in a library. A career in Library and Information Science provides opportunities to work in and manage the repository of books and other knowledge resources.

What is covered in Library and Information Science?

When you visit a library, you simply see stacks of books arranged in a particular manner and an online or offline cataloguing system which helps in the availability of specific books and their place in the library. However, Library Science is not restricted to just these. In fact, it is a full-fledged discipline of study at graduate and postgraduate level. As a student of this subject, you will go through a number of theoretical and practical topics, such as role of information and libraries in society, character-traits, nature, use and value of information, conceptual difference between data, knowledge and information, approaches to library classification types of libraries (academic, public, special libraries etc.), various formats of libraries (e.g. physical, virtual and digital), organization of library resources, cataloguing of library books and magazines, online reference and information resources and their types, classification, application of information technology in libraries, hardware and software for libraries, concepts and application of automation (library automation), web based communication, library legislation, bibliographic standards, preservation of library material, emerging...

Catch The Rain: Monsoon 2021
How India is conserving water

India’s progress, as a nation, is only possible with water security and effective water management. The vision of India’s development and self-sufficiency is dependent on our water sources and our water management. However, the challenge of the water crisis is increasing and it is closely linked with the country’s development. Targeting this problem of water management, the Ministry of Jal Shakti took up a national-wide campaign “Jal Shakti Abhiyan: Catch the Rain” focusing on saving and conserving rainwater with the theme “Catch the rain where it falls, where it falls.” This campaign was launched by the Honourable Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi on March 22, 2021 transforming Jal Shakti into Jal Adhitya.

As a run-up to this Monsoon 2021 campaign, the “Jal Shakti Abhiyan: Catch the Rain Awareness Generation Campaign” was launched on 21 December, 2020. In collaboration with NYKOS (Nishu Yadav Kendra Sangathan) which is being implemented in 623 districts of the country. So far, it has been passed by many villages and towns. People of all age groups including Government functionaries like District Magistrates, Municipal Commissioners, Public Representatives, Sarpanch, youth and common people.

What is the ‘Catch the rain’ campaign?

Population growth, increasing demand for water in the agricultural and industrial sector, and climate change are major factors influencing the availability of water. Per capita water availability in India has significantly reduced due to the expanding population. If supply of water is not increased and the demand and wastage of water is not reduced, there could be water shortages in the future. Therefore, water conservation has become a necessity rather than an option. This campaign aims to cover both urban and rural areas of all the districts in the country during the pre-monsoon and monsoon periods of 2021 till November 30. The primary motive of this campaign is to make the states and all stakeholders create Rain Water Harvesting Structures available to the citizens, and publicize and adopt sustainable practices. With people’s active participation, this will ensure the storage of rainwater for the 4-5 months of monsoon.

The campaign focuses on the maintenance of the existing Rainwater Harvesting Structures (RWHS) and creation of new RWHSs, preparation of the geo-tagged inventory of all water bodies in the country, followed by a detailed scoping plan for water conservation at the village level and setting up of Jal Shakti Kendra as an integrated water knowledge centres in all districts and to disseminate information on RWHS. To ensure maintenance of these structures, existing Water Harvesting Structures (WHs) checking dams, ponds, lakes etc., removal of encroachments & dosing of water bodies to increase the storage capacity of the WHs; removal of obstructions in the chinooks which bring water to them; repairing the step-wells and traditional ROHS; using defunct borewells to recharge aquifers; reclamation of wetlands and rejuvenation of rivers, will be done among other things. Awareness building drives & seminars to sensitise & involve people, school children & others will also be undertaken to encourage their active participation.

The campaign envisages inter-ministerial and inter-sectoral convergence of all development programs related to water and its conservation like Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme (MGNREGS), Atal Mission for Rejuvenation and Urban Transformation (AMRUT), Rural Sanitation and 8.5% central to the states.

Need of the hour

Mentioning this campaign on ‘Main Ki Rasoi’, the Prime Minister pointed out that the better the India manages rainwater, the lesser the country’s dependence on groundwater. Therefore, the success of campaigns like “Catch the Rain” is very important. He called upon steps to stop water conservation efforts in the days leading up to Monsoon. To facilitate this, the States have been requested to open “Rain Centers” in each district. In collaboration with the Central Government.

EN Explains

1. Ahar Pyne (Bihar)

An indigenous irrigation practice in South Bihar, Ahar is a traditional type of water harvesting structure, embankments on three sides and fourth side being the natural gradient of up and use the stored water during dry spells. The massive underground reservoir can hold as much as 40 million litres of rainwater. It harvests water for about 10 days per year and can supply water for as long as seven months. These wells can hold up to two acres litres of rainwater.

2. Kandi Community Micro Irrigation (Hoshangpur District, Punjab)

A type of irrigation project where solar PV energy is being used for pumping water from a canal to irrigate the area under command with micro irrigation, either by sprinkler or drip irrigation. The model is based on the “resource-to-root” concept. The system operates in a water-saving manner, which is in line with water conservation efforts. The project has been executed in a hassle-free manner and as a result, the demand for water has increased. Reliability at zero costs has resulted in increased income to the farmers.

3. Mazhopolima Initiative (Thissur, Kerala)

Mazhopolima, meaning bounty of rain, is an artificial groundwater recharge program. In the rainy season, the rooftop rainwater is led through pipes on a sand filter at the end, to open dug wells to recharge the aquifers. When the rainwater is recharged in that area, the groundwater table goes back up. However, when the rainwater table is low, the water is retained in wells for a while and then pushed into the ground. The system helps communities to access an abundance of drinking water from the aquifers.

4. Chakradhara (Chhindwara District, Madhya Pradesh)

A traditional Irrigation system in Madhya Pradesh, Chakradhara is a type of community-based irrigation system. This system is modelled as a simple and effective method and is suitable for small-scale projects.

5. Kuis/Kunris (Himalayan Region, Himachal Pradesh)

Kuis are community-managed traditional irrigation systems. These are surface channels that divert water from natural flowing streams (kundis). A typical Kuis has a capacity to serve approximately 6 to 30 farmers and irrigate an area of 20 ha. The structure consists of a temporary headwall (constructed usually with two bored) which channels the water downstream. The Kuis consist of a series of (kundis) outlets to draw water out and irrigate nearby terraced fields. The water would flow from one Kuis to another and surplus water, if any, would drain back to the kundis through a closed loop structure. Kuis are an example of how traditional methods of irrigation are being adapted to modern day technologies helping in adapting the technology to local requirements.

6. Bamboo Drip Irrigation (Meghalaya)

An indigenous practice of the North East India where water from stream and spring up and use the stored water during dry spells. The massive underground reservoir can hold as much as 40 million litres of rainwater. It harvests water for about 10 days per year and can supply water for as long as seven months. These wells can hold up to two acres litres of rainwater. In the rainy season, the rooftop rainwater is led through pipes on a sand filter at the end, to open dug wells to recharge the aquifers. When the rainwater is recharged in that area, the groundwater table goes back up. However, when the rainwater table is low, the water is retained in wells for a while and then pushed into the ground. The system helps communities to access an abundance of drinking water from the aquifers.

CAREER IN LIBRARY & INFORMATION SCIENCE

Science are also available. These may be good to improve one's knowledge and understanding about the subject. However, since most of the jobs the requirement is for a full time course, a regular course should always be preferable.

Research opportunities

MPhil and PhD can also be pursued with themes related to library science. However, changing in terms of Information availability, technological interventions and changing preferences, there is need for new researches. Research opportunities can be explored both at Indian and foreign institutions. Scholarship-based research opportunities are also available.

You should choose an institution of good standing, which is well-equipped and charges reasonable fee. Few of the private institutions have kept the course fee too high, though the value offered by them leave much to be desired.

Job profile

As a librarian, your job is to manage various information resources and make these resources available to those who need them. At junior level, you will be classifying, cataloguing, storing, and retrieving the information resources (books, newspapers, magazines). At senior level, you will be required to supervise such work. Learning the information resources is also included in your job. So, you have to find out which books, magazines, etc. are coming in that can be added to your library. This applies to digital resources like CDs, DVDs, video compilations as well. In such matters, you will also see recommendations from readers and other stakeholders. You will assist in budget preparation/estimation for library and most importantly arrange for procurement of books, etc.

Career growth

You may begin working as a junior or senior librarian. With experience and possibly with higher qualifications, you may move up to senior positions either in the same organization or by switching over to some other. In few cases, the role could be related to publishing also.

Areas of work

Maximum number of opportunities can be found in educational institutions all types-schools, colleges, universities, premier institutions such as Indian Institute of Management (IIMs), Indian Institute of Technology (IITs), National Institute of Design (NID), Indian Institute of Information Technology (IIITs), National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER), etc. In such management, law and engineering colleges and other specialised institutions like Indian Institute of Management (IIMs), Indian Institute of Technology (IITs), National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER), etc. In such institutions, management, law and engineering colleges and other specialised institutions like National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER), etc. In such institutions, management, law and engineering colleges and other specialised institutions like Indian Institute of Management (IIMs), Indian Institute of Technology (IITs), National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER), etc. In such institutions, management, law and engineering colleges and other specialised institutions like Indian Institute of Management (IIMs), Indian Institute of Technology (IITs), National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER), etc.
TRILOCRAN POKHREL...

used to come home for long stays. While Pokhrel spent most of his time prepping the idea of Swadeshi among the Sikkimese peasants; in his leisure, he visited local hand-crafts such as Rongji, Rummo, Pakeyo, Rango where he sat with his Charida (spinning wheel) to make cotton threads. Akin to Gandhi, he too wore cotton dhoti and a pair of Khadaa (wooden slippers) "I did this, mainly to encourage the spirit of Swadeshi i.e. to spin and wear indigenous fabric, to establishe and promote village industries etc. so that the villages could be developed as self sufficient.

Tara Prasad Bhattarya of Kapurpur village claims that Trilochan Pokhrel gave away most of his land to his father.
However, there are still remains of a small house where the late freedom fighter stayed whenever he visited his native place. The house is known as Pokhrel Bara (House of Pokhrel). Bhattarya showed us a photograph of Gandhi Pokhrel and an envelope that contains the late Freedom Fighter's death certificate issued by Pratikrit Chikitsalaya, Ranipatra, District Purnea, Bihar. The timing of his death is noted as 9 AM, 27-UPOS. In 1980, the Sikkim government posthumously honored Trilochan Pokhrel with the LD Kazi Award for Democratic Movement.

CATCH THE RAIN: MONSOON 2021 is tapped by using bamboo pipes to irrigate plantations. The water taps the natural flow of streams and springs across terraced uplands. Reduced channel sections and diversion units are used at the last stage of water application. The last channel section enables the water to be drained down the sides of the plant. It is practiced in the areas of Janta, Khir, and Gauro Hills of Meghalaya are largely made up of steep slopes and generally rocky terrain where the soil has a low water retention capacity.

Due to the rocky terrain, the use of water channels is difficult and therefore the bamboo drip irrigation system helps in easy transportation of water from the sources to the fields.

7. Johors (Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, and the Thar Desert of Rajasthan)

Johor is a simple mud and rubble barrier built across the contour of a slope to arrest rainwater. It is one of the oldest systems used to conserve and recharge ground water. Johors collect monsoon water, which slowly seeps into recharge groundwater. Sometimes, many Johors are interconnected with gullies or deep channels with a slightly wider outlet in a river or stream nearby to prevent structural damage. These earthworks damns are meant to catch and conservers rainwater, leading to improved percolation and groundwater recharge and maintain soil moisture. Johors act as a source of water for crushing purposes by humans and cattle. They are called "jhalas" in Jaisalmer.
Availability of water for irrigation and agricultural purposes has led to a decline in distress migration.

8. Apatani (Arunachal Pradesh)

It is a wet rice cultivation fish farming system practiced by Apatani Tribes of Ziro in lower Subansiri district of Arunachal Pradesh. This area receives an average annual rainfall of 1700mm. This system harvests both rainwater and surface water which is simultaneously used for irrigation and pisciculture. In this method, water from small streams and springs is tapped by creating temporary mud walls that act as barriers and provide storage. They also act as flow regulators and help in diverting the flow towards the required area in the terraces and vicinity of agriculture in the land in the valley. The system uses the rainwater and surface water flowing along the slope. The water tapped at the hillock is mixed with the organic waste and passed across the village through small channels. The local drainage system is merged with the irrigation system which, in turn, improves the nutrient content of water required for rice cultivation.

9. Phad (Maharashtra)

It is one of the best examples of a community-managed irrigation system. The Phad system that came into existence some 400 years ago, is prevalent in north-western Maharashtra. This system is operated on three rivers in the Talai basin - Panhula, Moseen and Arain. Phad means a block of land used for irrigation purposes.
The Phad receives water from the Gandhak (a check dam) and is diverted through the canal or Pat. The excess water is diverted back to the main river through Sehwar (the waste canal). Between each Phad, there are small openings called Saras.
Gravity acts as the main force distribution of water from one Phad to another. With the help of this system, small quantities of water flow in the streams which would have otherwise gone waste, are utilized for irrigation to the maximum possible extent. As the canal system in the case extends over a short length, the seepage and corrosion losses are less.

Additionally, the initial and maintenance costs of the system are low.

10. Jhaloros (Rajasthan, Gujarat)

Jhaloros are rectangular-shaped step wells that have tiersed steps on three or four sides. These step wells collect the subterranean seepage of an upstream reservoir or a lake.
Jhaloras were built to ensure easy and regular supply of water for religious rites, royal ceremonies and community use. Jodhpur in Rajasthan alone has eight Jhaloros with the oldest Jhalora, the Mahamandir Jhalora, dating back to 1660 AD.
